The full 162-game regular season was planned to begin on March 26, but the pandemic caused Major League Baseball (MLB) to announce on March 12 that the start of the regular season would be delayed by at least two weeks.[1] On March 16, MLB announced that the season would be postponed indefinitely, following recommendations from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to restrict events of more than 50 people.[2] This was the first time that MLB games had been put on hold since the 2001 season, when the season was paused for over a week after the September 11 attacks. Spring training resumed on July 1 and was rebranded as "Summer Camp".[3] On July 3, the All-Star Game was canceled because of the delay to the regular season. Dodger Stadium, which was set to host the 2022 All-Star Game.[4] On July 18, the Canadian federal government denied permission for the Toronto Blue Jays to play their home games at Rogers Centre this season on grounds that repeated cross-border trips by both the Blue Jays and their opponents would be a major risk due to the higher spikes in COVID-19 cases in the U.S. compared to those to play their home games at Sahlen Field in Buffalo, home of their Triple-A affiliate Buffalo Bisons.[5] An expanded 16-team postseason tournament began on September 29, with games of all but the first round being played at neutral sites. The World Series began on October 27, with the Los Angeles Dodgers defeating the Tampa Bay Rays in six games to win their first title since 1988.[6][7][8] Schedule The 2020 schedule greatly differed from the normal 162-game schedule. In an effort to reduce travel, each team played only nine opponents during the regular season instead of the usual 19 or 20. Teams were scheduled to play 10 games against each of their four division opponents. The remaining 20 games of the 60-game schedule were interleague contests. To reduce travel, the interleague division match-ups were AL East vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Central vs NL Central, and AL West vs NL East, AL Central vs NL Cen the Mexico Series and Puerto Rico Series games were canceled; the former would have featured the San Diego Padres and the Arizona Diamondbacks at Mexico City's Estadio Alfredo Harp Helú, and the latter featuring the New York Mets and the Miami Marlins at Hiram Bithorn Stadium in San Juan. On April 1, MLB canceled the London Series, which would have featured the Chicago Cubs and the St. Louis Cardinals at London Stadium.[11] On April 30, MLB canceled the MLB Little League World Series, which was scheduled to be played on August 23 between the Boston Red Sox and Baltimore Orioles.[12] This cancellation coincided with the cancellation of the 2020 Little League World Series.[13] On August 3, MLB canceled MLB at Field of Dreams — a game that was scheduled to be played on August 13 between the St. Louis Cardinals and Chicago White Sox at a temporary 8,000-seat ballpark on the Dyersville, Iowa farm site of the 1989 sports film Field of Dreams. The game has been postponed to 2021.[14][15] March agreement between MLB and MLBPA On March 26, MLB and the Major League Baseball Players Association (MLBPA) reached an agreement on multiple considerations related to the start of the season being delayed, including:[16] The 2020 MLB draft was to be held by July 20 and reduced from 40 rounds to five rounds. Player salaries were pro-rated, based on the length of the season. Players will receive full service time for the season Roster moves were frozen as of March 27, until the season began. Possible schedules The indefinite delay of the season caused MLB to internally consider a number of scenarios for playing the season, as well as analysts suggested.[17][18] In early April, Jeff Passan of a vortened regular season, a season with many doubleheaders, and a postseason extending into late November with a World Series at an indoor or warm-weather neutral site were suggested.[17][18] In early April, Jeff Passan of a vortened regular season with many doubleheaders, and a postseason extending into late November with a World Series at an indoor or warm-weather neutral site were suggested.[17][18] In early April, Jeff Passan of a vortened regular season with many doubleheaders, and a postseason extending into late November with a World Series at an indoor or warm-weather neutral site were suggested.[17][18] In early April, Jeff Passan of a vortened regular season with many doubleheaders, and a postseason extending into late November with a World Series at an indoor or warm-weather neutral site were suggested.[17][18] In early April, Jeff Passan of a vortened regular season with many doubleheaders, and a postseason extending into late November with a World Series at an indoor or warm-weather neutral site were suggested.[17][18] In early April, Jeff Passan of a vortened regular season with many doubleheaders, and a postseason extending into late November with a World Series at an indoor or warm-weather neutral site were suggested.[17][18] In early April, Jeff Passan of a vortened vortene ESPN reported that MLB was "increasingly focused on a plan that could allow them to start the season as early as May and has the support of high-ranking federal public health officials".[19] The plan would have involved all 30 teams playing games with no fans in stadiums around the Phoenix metropolitan area, including Chase Field and spring training complexes. Players would have lived in isolation at local hotels. Another report from USA Today baseball writer Bob Nightengale detailed another MLB proposal utilizing the Phoenix metro sites, but with the additional use of spring training sites in Florida, Marlins Park in Miami, and St. Petersburg's Tropicana Field. In addition, the 30 teams would be re-aligned for the season depending on their spring training sites into six divisions based upon their locations and Florida and agnostic to the usual AL/NL demarcations and traditional geographic rivalries, effectively making the spring training cactus League regular-season leagues. [20] No interleague play would take place and the designated hitter rule would be utilized for all 30 teams, with the World Series occurring in November utilizing the larger MLB and Major League Baseball Players Association (MLBPA) were unable to agree on a specific plan for a shortened season. In mid-May the MLB owners proposed a schedule of 82 games, to begin in July, with games to be played without fans in attendance. To minimize travel, teams would play only against other teams in their geographical division, plus interleague games against teams in the corresponding division of the other league. A team would play 13 games against each division rival and six games against each team in the other league's division.[22] Postseason play would be expanded from 10 teams. A designated hitter would be allowed in all games. Teams would have 30-man rosters available for each game. The proposal also outlined safety measures for health of players and staff and a modified compensation plan for players. [23][24][25] On June 1, the MLBPA countered with an 114-game proposal, with a regular season running from June 30 to October 31, a November postseason, giving players the right to opt-out of participating, a salary deferral plan in the event the postseason has to be canceled due to a second wave of the virus, and a $100 million advance during the second spring training, among others.[26] Owners then submitted a 76-game proposal to the player salaries, and playoff pool money, among others.[27] The MLBPA responded one day later with an 89-game plan with full prorated player salaries, to which the MLBPA replied in a statement on June 13, "Further dialogue with the league would be futile. It's time to get back to work. Tell us when and where."[29] However, the week of June 15 saw the owners propose a 60-game season, [30] which on June 19 was rejected by the owners. Amid an increase in cases in Arizona and Florida, including positive cases among staff of the Phillies, and a Blue Jays player showing signs of symptoms, it was reported on June 19 that all spring training sites would be temporarily closed for deep cleaning, and all players would be required to test negative for COVID-19 before entering.[31] It was then reported on June 20 that almost all MLB teams had elected to re-locate their training camps back to their home cities.[32] On June 22, hours after the MLBPA rejected the MLB's offer to play a 60-game season, MLB owners voted unanimously to impose the 60-game plan.[33] By allowing the owners to unilaterally implement such a plan without the MLBPA, both sides agreed to health and safety protocols. Players reported to training camp July 1.[35] Due to concerns related to the pandemic, several players chose not to play the season.[37] In the new schedule, teams play 10 games against each of their four divisional opponents in three series, with an unequal number of home games against each opponent. Each team will have 20 home games of the schedule, all against the division of the opposite league, temporarily suspending the yearly rotation of which divisions play each other. Like normal seasons in which corresponding interleague divisions play each other (e.g. 2018), teams play six games against their "natural rival" and three or four games against each of the other four teams in the division.[37] However, for this year only, the Cleveland Indians were paired with the Pittsburgh Pirates instead of their normal rivals, the Cincinnati Reds, and the Detroit Tigers were paired with the Reds instead of the Pirates. This was done to reduce travel for all four teams. The season started on July 23, with two games: New York Yankees at Washington Nationals and San Francisco Giants at Los Angeles Dodgers. The remaining 26 teams opened the season on July 24.[37] On July 23, MLB and MLBPA announced that the postseason will be an expanded 16-team playoff tournament for 2020 only, instead of the normal 10-team sourced that the postseason will go to the remaining teams with the best win-loss records. The teams in each league will be seeded by division winners (1-3), division runners-up (4-6), and best teams remaining (7-8). Seeding ties will be resolved by head-to-head record, intra-league record, and record in final 20 intra-league games, to remove the necessity for additional games. The first round of the playoffs will be a best-of-three series called the Wild Card Series, with all games to be played at the home of the higher seeded team. After that, the postseason will follow the usual pattern of five-game Division series, seven-game League Championship Series, and a seven-game World Series. [38][39] Postponed games to be played at the home of the COVID-19 pandemic on sports COVID-1 19 outbreaks among the Miami Marlins and St. Louis Cardinals, as well as positive tests on the Cincinnati Reds, New York Mets, Oakland Athletics, and San Francisco Giants, resulted in the postponement of a total of 40 games. After additional Miami's four-game home-and-home series with the New York Yankees, both originally scheduled from July 27 to 30.[40] In order to allow for some flexibility in making games up, the Yankees and Orioles played two games against each other in Baltimore July 29 and 30, moving them up one week from their originally scheduled dates of August 3 and 4. The Marlins later confirmed that 21 players and coaches tested positive.[41] The next series for both teams, Miami's home series against the Washington Nationals and Philadelphia's series at the Toronto Blue Jays, were postponed. Both series against the Washington Nationals and Philadelphia's series at the Toronto Blue Jays, were postponed. Milwaukee Brewers from July 31 to August 2.[43] Four additional games, a home-and-home series against the Detroit Tigers originally scheduled for August 3 to 6, were also postponed after an additional seven positive tests throughout the next week, St. Louis's three-game series against the Chicago Cubs, originally August 7 to 9, and their three-game series against the Pittsburgh Pirates, originally August 10 to 12, were postponed. A doubleheader against Detroit on August 13 which would have been made up games from August 3 and 4 was also postponed and later canceled. [44][45] Cincinnati had a player test positive resulting in the postponement of two games against Pittsburgh on August 15 and 16.[46] Cincinnati's game against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postponeed as well.[47] The New York Mets had a player and staff member test positive resulting in the postponeed as well.[47] The New York Mets had a player and staff member test positive resulting in the postponement of their August 20 game against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postponed as well.[47] The New York Mets had a player and staff member test positive resulting in the postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postponed as well.[47] The New York Mets had a player and staff member test positive resulting in the postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals on August 18 was postpone against the Kansas City Royals Yankees on August 21 to 23.[48][49] Oakland had a positive test resulting in the postponement of their August 30 game against the Houston Astros.[50] As a precaution, Oakland's three-game series against the Seattle Mariners on September 1 to 3 was postponed.[51] San Francisco had a positive test resulting in the postponement of two games against the San Diego Padres originally scheduled for September 11 and 12,152] All postponed games were made up except for two games between the St. Louis Cardinals and Detroit Tigers, which had no bearing on the playoff teams other than seeding. The Wild Card Series, while the Division Series, League Championship Series, and World Series were their normal lengths. The Wild Card Series games were played at the home field of the higher seeded team. The division and league championship series were played at neutral sites, similar to those used for both the National Basketball Association and National Hockey League playoffs, to limit the possibility of another COVID-19 outbreak that could both disrupt the schedule and affect competitive integrity. [55] The American League played at the Texas Rangers' Bodgers' Dodgers' Dodg place at Globe Life Field. [56] The Milwaukee Brewers and Houston Astros became the first teams to make the postseason with a record below .500 to win a playoff series, as they defeated the Minnesota Twins in the Wild Card Series and the Oakland Athletics in the Division Series, before losing the American League Championship Series to the Tampa Bay Rays. They also became the first, and currently only, team with a record below .500 to win a playoff game, as the 1981 Royals and Brewers were swept in the first rounds they played. They also became just the second team to force a game seven after being down 3-0 to the Tampa Bay Rays in the ALCS, joining only the Boston Red Sox who ended up completing the comeback against the New York Yankees in 2004. During this time, and during the second game of a doubleheader or a scheduled neutral-site game (such as the MLB Little League Classic) may carry a 27th player for that game only. This player can either be a position players to 28 players. During this time, clubs can carry a maximum of 14 pitchers. Any team that is playing the second game of a doubleheader or a scheduled neutral-site game may carry a 29th players for that game only. This players can either be a position players or pitchers will be allowed to pitch in any regular-season or postseason game, with limited exceptions (such as one team leading by at least seven runs, or the game going into extra innings). Once a position player or designated hitter in each of 20 games, he earns the status of "two-way player" for the remainder of the season plus all of the next season. Players with this status may pitch at any time during a game. For this season only, any player who met the above requirements in either the 2018 or 2019 season qualifies for two-way status. Players designated as pitchers, if placed on the injured list, must spend a minimum of 15 days on the IL prior to being eligible for activation. Position players may be activated after a minimum of 10 days on the IL. Two-way players are subject to the rules for pitchers. The seven-day minimum on the IL for concussions remains unchanged. Pitchers and two-way players optioned to the minor leagues must remain there for at least 15 days before being eligible for recall to the major league club, rather than the previous 10-day minimum. The minimum option period for position players remains 10 days. A pitcher must face at least three batters unless the inning ends or the pitcher is injured. Managers now have up to 20 seconds to challenge a play (reduced from 30 seconds). Additionally, Rule 7.04 governing protested games was amended to read "Protesting a game shall never be permitted, regardless of whether such complaint is based on judgement decisions by the umpire or an allegation that an umpire misapplied these rules or otherwise rendered a decision in violation of these rules."[61] Temporary rules for shortened 2020 season The following temporary rules for the shortened 2020 season were announced on June 24. Note that some of these additional changes supersede the rule changes which were announced in February.[62] Each club could invite up to 60 players to its July training camp. The 60-man pool is composed of players to its July training camp.

required to include all members of their 40-man roster in the 60-man pool. The transaction freeze in place since March 27 was lifted on June 26. Only players included on the list submitted to the league office may be used by the team in regular season and postseason games for the 2020 season. If a player is added to the 60-man pool via trade, free agent signing, or other transaction must be made to keep the total number of eligible players at 60. Players in the 60-man pool via trade, free agent signing, or other transaction must be added to the 40-man and active rosters in the usual fashion before they may play in regular season or postseason games. Those not on the active roster train at an alternate training site.[63] The designated hitter was used in both the American and National Leagues. Teams could have up to 30 active players on their opening day rosters. The active roster train at an alternate training site.[63] The designated hitter was used in both the American and National Leagues. after the first two weeks of the season. Originally, the roster was set to reduce to 26 players after four weeks, but this reduction was eliminated on August 4.[64] The minimum option period for players optioned to their club's training site is 10 days for both pitchers and position players. The provision requiring pitchers to remain in the minor leagues for 15 days is not in effect this season. The trade deadline was August 31 (moved from July 31). To be eligible for the postseason, a player must have been added to a club's 40-man roster by September 15. Clubs were permitted to carry a taxi-squad of players for away games. Originally, the squad was limited to three players. On August 4, the squad was expanded to five players. The original rule stipulated that if three players were carried, at least one had to be a catcher. It is unclear if that restriction remains under the new rule.[64] In regular-season games, extra inning automatically started with a runner on second base. The runner was the player in the batting order position immediately before the lead-off batter for the inning (or a pinch-runner, subject to the usual substitution rules). Should this runner score, it was considered an unearned run. This rule does not apply to postseason games. There was a 10-day injured list for both pitchers and position players. The 60-day IL was reduced to 45 days. A separate IL exists for players who test positive for, have symptoms of, or have confirmed exposure to COVID-19. There is no maximum or minimum number of days for this IL. There are no limitations on eligible pitchers. The "two-way player" provisions announced in February do not apply for this season. Once the game has started, the postseason rule adopted in 2009 will be in effect in case of inclement weather until it has reached official game status. The postseason was expanded to include eight teams from each league. The first round is a best-of-three series with the better seed hosting all three games. The final three games. Field hosted the National League Championship Series. Spectators will be permitted at Globe Life Field starting with the American League Championship Series and Petco Park hosted the American League Championship Series. The World Series will be held at Globe Life Field. Clubs were required to have an expanded dugout in order to practice social distancing. Celebrations (such as those after a walk-off hit) must be done on the field, at least six feet apart, and not in the clubhouse. Champagne is also prohibited. No physical lineup cards were exchanged. Instead, lineups were exchanged through the MLB app. The following temporary rule was announced on July 30, to be effective on August 1. Doubleheaders consisted of two seven-inning games, as is the case in minor leagues. One doubleheader, which was played on July 28 before the rule change, featured two nine-inning games. If a suspended game resumes with the trailing team having played less than five innings, the game played after the completion of the suspended game resumes with the trailing team having played less than five innings, the game played after the completion of the suspended game resumes with the trailing team having played less than five innings. that enables it to be a suspended game (like a field issue or equipment failure or if the game was tied when stopped), the game played afterwards retains the length (seven or nine innings) that it was scheduled for at the time it started. Ausmus served as a special assistant to the Angels general manager Billy Eppler in the 2018 season.[84] Maddon was hired by the Angels on October 16, 2019.[85] Maddon had spent 31 years in the Angels organization (12 years as a coach) before managing the Tampa Bay Rays for nine years. New York Mets Mickey Callaway was fired after two seasons with a record of 163-161 (.503) with no playoff appearances. [86] On November 1, 2019, Carlos Beltrán, who played for the team from 2005 to the middle of the 2011 season, was named the new manager Brian Cashman last season.[87] Carlos Beltrán Mutual Decision Luis Rojas On January 16, Beltran and the Mets agreed to part ways before managing a game for the Mets, in light of his reported involvement in the Astros using cameras to steal signs.[88] The Mets organization.[89] Philadelphia Phillies Gabe Kapler Fired Joe Girardi On October 10, 2019, Kapler was fired after two seasons with a record of 161-163 (.497) with no playoff appearances.[90] Girardi, who served as an baseball analyst for the MLB Network the last two seasons, was hired as new manager on October 24, 2019. Girardi previously managed the Florida Marlins for the 2006 season and the New York Yankees from 2008 to 2017.[91] Houston Astros A. J. Hinch Dusty Baker On January 13, Hinch was suspended by MLB for the 2020 season as part of an investigation against the Astros shortly after the suspension was announced. Hinch had a regular season record of 481-329 (.594) with a total of four postseason appearances compiling a record of 28-22 (.560), two World Series appearances, and a World Series championship in 2017, throughout his tenure as Astros manager. [70] On January 29, the Astros hired Dusty Baker to replace Hinch. He managed the San Francisco Giants from 1993 to 2002, the Chicago Cubs from 2006, the Cincinnati Redsonate Redsonat from 2008 to 2013, and the Washington Nationals during the 2016 and 2017 seasons. His overall managerial record is 1863-1636 (.532) in the regular season, and 23-32 (.418) in the playoffs, losing the 2002 World Series. Boston Red Sox Alex Cora Ron Roenicke Mutual Decision Roenicke M part ways with each other after two seasons. Cora had been under investigation by MLB over the Houston Astros' use of hidden cameras to steal signs during that team's 2017 championship season (while Cora was the bench coach) as well as under investigation of allegations that the Red Sox engaged in impermissible electronic sign stealing in 2018 (while Cora was the manager). In his two seasons as Red Sox manager, he compiled a record of 192-132 (.593), winning the 2018 World Series.[92] Roenicke was promoted from bench coach to interim manager on February 11. A longtime coach, his only managerial experience was with the Milwaukee Brewers from 2011 to 2015, compiling a record of 342-331 (.508), with one playoff appearance and a 5-6 (.455) record in the postseason.[93] On April 22, the "interim" tag was removed from Roenicke's title, following MLB's findings about the 2018 Red Sox, which focused on the team's video replay operator.[94] In-season Team Former manager Reason for leaving New manager Notes Detroit Tigers Ron Gardenhire Lloyd McClendon Retired A. J. Hinch On September 19, Gardenhire announced his immediate retirement due to health concerns. Lloyd McClendon was named interim manager for the rest of the season. He tied the American League record set by starter Doug Fister during the 2012 season.[117] Rick Porcello (NYM): Recorded his 150th career win with a victory against the Washington Nationals on August 5. He became the 263rd player to reach this mark.[118] Zac Gallen (ARI): Set the Major League record for most consecutive starts starting a career giving up three earned runs or less in each game at 22 with his outing on August 28 against the San Francisco Giants. [120] Josh Hader (MIL): With his hitless appearance on September 2 against the Detroit Tigers, Hader set a Major League record with his 12th straight hitless game to start a season. This broke the record that was held by Justin Wilson in 2017, Scott Aldred in 1999 and John Franco in 1987.[121] Hader's streak ended the next game when Oscar Mercado doubled to lead off the inning on September 5.[122] Clayton Kershaw (LAD): Recorded his 2,500th career strikeout on September 3 against the Arizona Diamondbacks when he struck out Nick Ahmed in the third inning. He became the 39th player, and third-youngest, to reach this mark.[123] Miscellaneous Toronto Blue Jays: Became the first team in Major League history to lose a game in which they recorded at least 18 hits and seven home runs on August 12 against the Miami Marlins.[124] Chicago White Sox: Hit four consecutive home runs against the St. Louis Cardinals on August 16, tying the Major League record. This was the second time in White Sox history and tenth in Major League history. The group of Yoan Moncada, Yasmani Grandal, José Abreu and Eloy Jiménez accomplished this feat, with all four home runs on August 14, 2008, against the Kansas City Royals. [125] Became the first team in Major League history to hit back-to-back home runs to lead off the game twice off the same pitcher in the same season. On August 12, Tim Anderson and Eloy Jiménez hit the leadoff back-to-back home runs against Matthew Boyd of the Detroit Tigers. Then on August 17, Anderson and Yoan Moncada hit the leadoff back-to-back home runs.[126] Became the first team in Major League history to go undefeated against left-handed pitchers with a record of 14-0.[127] San Diego Padres: Became the first team in Major League history to hit at least one grand slams were made against the Texas Rangers.[128] Joe Girardi (PHI): Recorded his 1,000th win as a manager when the Phillies defeated the Washington Nationals on August 26. Girardi became the 65th manager to reach this mark. He did so in 1,808 games.[129] Los Angeles Dodgers: Set the National League record for most runs in a single inning in a postseason game by scoring 11 runs in the first inning of Game 3 of the 2020 National League Championship Series against the Atlanta Braves on October 14.[131] Atlanta Braves on October 14.[1 record of 28 that was set in 1929 by the St. Louis Cardinals.[132] Among these runs, 18 were home runs, tying the Major League record.[133] Set the Major League record.[133] Set the Major League record for consecutive scoreless innings to begin a postseason series at 22 innings with their 13-inning Game 1 shutout and Game 2 series-clinching shutout.[134] New York Yankees: Became the first team in Major League history with six or more home runs in three consecutive games from September 15 to 17 against the Toronto Blue Jays. Their 19 home runs in that same span is also a record.[135] Dusty Baker (HOU): With the Astros making it to the postseason, Baker became the first manager in Major League history to lead five different teams to the playoffs.[136] Cincinnati Reds / Atlanta Braves: The Reds-Braves Game 1 scoreless duel through 12 innings set a Major League record of ten innings that was achieved on four separate occasions.[137] New York Yankees / Cleveland Indians: Game 2 of their American League Wild Card Series on September 30, which the Yankees won 10-9, lasted four hours and 50 minutes (not counting the two rain delays), making it the longest nine-inning game in Major League history.[138] Tampa Bay Rays: Set a Major League Wild Card Series on September 30, which the Yankees won 10-9, lasted four hours and 50 minutes (not counting the two rain delays), making it the longest nine-inning game by fanning the two rain delays). 18 New York Yankees in Game 2 of their American League Division Series on October 6.[139] Houston Astros / Oakland Athletics: Set the Major League Division Series.[140] Each team hit 12 home runs, also a division series record.[141] Houston Astros: Became the first team in postseason history to hit a leadoff home run and walk-off home run in the same game, with the former hit by George Springer and the latter by Carlos Correa. They beat the Tampa Bay Rays in Game 5 of the American League Championship Series. [142] Became the second team in Major League History to force a Game 7 after losing the first three games. Houston lost the First three games of the ALCS to the Tampa Bay Rays, before forcing Game 7. [143] However, the Astros were not able to duplicate the Red Sox. Although they were allowed to conduct training camp with stricter protocols than those mandated by MLB, Minister of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Marco Mendicino cited that repeated cross-border travel by players would carry a major risk due to the higher number of COVID-19 cases in the U.S. [164] Mendicino did not rule out the permission being granted for postseason games. On July 20, the Pittsburgh Pirates offered the use of PNC Park as a site for Blue Jays home games. [165][166] However, health officials in Pennsylvania denied permission for this arrangement, citing concerns over additional travel to and from Pittsburgh amid an increase in local cases. [167] On July 24, the Blue Jays announced that they would play the majority of their home games at Sahlen Field in Buffalo, New York, home of the Jays' first two home series against the Washington Nationals and Philadelphia Phillies were relocated to the visiting teams' venues, Nationals Park and Citizens Bank Park, respectively, with the Jays as designated home team.[168][170][171] However, the Phillies series was postponed and made up in Buffalo.[172] Broadcast rights Television National This is the seventh year of the current eight-year deals with Fox, ESPN, and TBS. Fox was to televise the MLB at Field of Dreams game on August 13. FS1 televised games on Tuesday nights and on Saturdays both during the afternoon and night. ESPN televised games on its flagship telecasts were exclusive; all other national telecasts were subject to local blackout. TBS televised one AL Wild Card Series, both American League Division Series and the American League Championship Series. ESPN televised seven of the eight Wild Card Series games, both American League Division Series and the American League Championship Series games, both American League Division Series and the American League Championship Series games, both American League Division Series and the American League Championship Series games, both American League Division Series and the American League Division Series games, both American League Division Series games, both American League Division Series and the American League Division Series games, both marking the first time a national MLB game had aired on the network since 1995 (via the ill-fated The Baseball Network arrangement).[176] FS1 and MLB Network arrangement).[176] FS1 arrangement).[176] FS1 arrangement].[176] FS1 year. Local In Chicago, new television deals resulted in the end of free-to-air regional telecasts for the city's two franchises. In February, the Cubs launched the team-owned Marquee Sports Network, a joint venture with Sinclair Broadcast Group. The White Sox signed exclusively with NBC Sports Chicago under a multi-year deal.[177][178][179] In November 2019, MLB owners voted unanimously to revert "certain in-market digital [streaming] rights" to the teams themselves.[180][181] On April 1, the Los Angeles Dodgers' Spectrum SportsNet LA reached a carriage deal with AT&T (covering AT&T TV, U-verse, and DirecTV), concluding a seven-year impasse that had hindered the network's local availability.[182] Long-time Cincinnati Reds television play-by-play announcer Thom Brennaman resigned on September 26 after he was caught using a homophobic slur in a game on August 19 against the Kansas City Royals.[183][184] Sideline host Jim Day took over Brennaman's duties for the rest of the season, beginning August 20. Radio National ESPN Radio will air its 23rd season of national coverage, including Sunday Night Baseball, Saturday Games, Opening Day, Labor Day games, and the entire Major League Baseball postseason. Local The Oakland Athletics were briefly the first MLB team to abandon terrestrial radio in their primary market in favor of internet radio; the team initially carried games on TuneIn via the "A's Cast" channel, with plans for some games to be aired without commercial interruptions. The decision was prompted by competition with other local sports teams for time on stations, resulting in frequent pre-emptions and lowered priorities, and conflicts with regular station programming. The broadcasts were still carried on some terrestrial radio stations outside the Bay Area (with the closest being Sacramento's KHTK).[185][186] However, on July 30, 2020, it was reported that the team had backed out of the arrangement and signed with iHeartMedia to make 960 KNEW the team's flagship station (with its streaming platform shifting to iHeartRadio) beginning July 31. Team owner Dave Kaval cited people having become "budget-conscious" due to the pandemic as having influenced the decision.[187] Entercom's KMNB/Minneapolis will join WCCO as the FM flagship for the Minnesota Twins in an extension of rights until the 2023 season.[188] Chicago White Sox radio play-by-play announcer Ed Farmer, a former pitcher for the team who had been part of the team's radio broadcast staff since 1991, died on April 1 after a long-term battle with polycystic kidney disease.[189] On June 30, the team and its radio network named Andy Masur (the former pre-game host) as Farmer's successor.[190] Impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on production Cutout images of Washington Nationals fans placed in Nationals Park seats in August 2020 In order to reduce avoidable travel and the amount of personnel on-site for each game, most MLB broadcasters commentated away games remotely from either their broadcaster's studio, or their home stadium's broadcast booths. MLB safety protocols mandated remote broadcasts for away games on television, but radio broadcasters were allowed to be present on-site for home games only, and called away games if they so chose.[191] Some team's local television rightsholder served as the host broadcaster for each game, providing a neutral video feed to media partners (including the away team's local rightsholder, and in some cases, a national broadcaster), which added commentary, graphics, and other surrounding coverage for their audience.[194][195] MLB Network assisted with providing and using existing infrastructure for this arrangement.[196] Audio from Sony Interactive Entertainment's MLB: The Show video game franchise was used as artificial crowd noise for all games, and was played over the stadiums' audio systems on-site.[195] Fox announced plans to use augmented reality "virtual fans" in its games, [197] while ESPN leveraged experience from its remote broadcasts of KBO League games over the suspended pre-season.[198][199] The pandemic also led to changes in broadcast arrangements for several teams: Due to health risks, the Baltimore Orioles announced that Gary Thorne and Jim Palmer could not call its games for MASN this season.[200] Local sports radio personality Scott Garceau replaced Thorne on play-by-play; in 2021, the team would not renew the contracts of Thorne, Palmer, or analysts Mike Bordick and Rick Dempsey, with Garceau remaining part of the revamped team. [201] Sportsnet's Toronto Blue Jays color commentator Pat Tabler (who is a U.S. citizen) took on a reduced analyst role this season, leaving the team's alternate commentary team of Dan Shulman (play-by-play) and Buck Martinez (color; he normally performs play-by-play on games. [192][202] Due to his commitments to ESPN Radio coverage, Shulman was replaced by Joe Siddall for Toronto's Wild Card Series games. [203] Prior to the pandemic, the San Francisco Giants and NBC Sports Bay Area had already planned to have color commentator Mike Krukow broadcast 22 NL West road games remotely from the network's studios (with his play-by-play partner Duane Kuiper commentating on-site as normal), since his inclusion body myositis had made him unfit to travel. The need for this arrangement was ultimately rendered moot, with Krukow and Kuiper calling all Giants' games together from booths at Oracle Park.[191][204] On July 31, Texas Rangers radio voice Matt Hicks tested positive for COVID-19. His partner Eric Nadel subsequently opted out from broadcasting that weekend's games.[205] After television voice C. J Nitkowski tested positive in mid-September, Fox Sports Southwest switched to using a simulcast of the radio broadcast.
